Not all U.S. POWs were returned in '73, says Vietnamese defector

By ROBERT J. CALDWELL
Staff Writer

A defecting Vietnamese government official says that American prisoners of war were kept in North Vietnam and Laos after 1973, the year all POWs were to have been released.

"It was very common knowledge among Vietnamese officials that not all the POWs were returned (in 1973)," Le Quang Khai told The San Diego Union-Tribune last week.

Khai said he did not know how many American POWs remained captive after 1973, or whether any were still alive.

"It was not a great number. I don't think it was over 100, something like that. They were kept in very remote areas for security reasons ... so the secret wouldn't leak out," Khai said.

"I don't know if any are still alive but I can't rule out the possibility. Some soldiers of the former Saigon government were just released after 15 years in the (prison) camps. If they survived, some Americans might survive," said Khai.

Specific information about American POWs held after 1973 was a closely guarded secret in Vietnam, according to Khai. But he said he was told by a Vietnamese army officer in 1979 or 1980 that Americans had been held captive after 1975 at a prison camp in North Vietnam where the army officer was stationed.

Disillusioned

Khai, who said he began working in Hanoi's foreign ministry in 1978 as a young intern-researcher and rose to become editor of a ministry magazine, requested political asylum in the United States last month.

He said he was disillusioned by political repression and corruption in Vietnam and by the failure of Hanoi's Communist government to improve living standards for the Vietnamese people.

He also said that he disagreed with his government's handling of the POW/MIA issue.

The U.S. government for years has pressed Hanoi to provide a fuller accounting of more than 2,000 American servicemen still missing in Southeast Asia. Washington has made resolving the POW/MIA issue a precondition for normalizing diplomatic relations with Hanoi and lifting the U.S. trade embargo against Vietnam.

"Clearly, Vietnam doesn't know how to handle the problem. They desperately want normalization of relations, but they fear admitting they kept POWs after the 1973 deadline for returning prisoners," Khai said.

Khai said that he and others in the foreign ministry had recommended a more cooperative policy and the release of more information. Khai said he and others believed that a more forthright policy would appear more credible than the present policy of continuing to withhold information.

"What Vietnam is saying today is not convincing. We should tell the truth," Khai said.

"The Vietnamese government could provide information on Americans held in Laos. Some Americans may still be held in Laos today. And it definitely has information on POWs kept in Vietnam after 1973. Only by telling the truth for humanitarian reasons, not (just) political reasons, can the Vietnamese government show its sincerity to the American people. Then we could go forward with normalization," said Khai.

See POWs on Page A-20

POWS

Defector says prisoners in Vietnam after 1973

Khai added, however, that the full-disclosure option had been rejected by hard-liners in the Vietnamese government.

Khai told of attending staff meetings at the foreign ministry in Hanoi in the early 1980s during which participants discussed the POW issue. The discussions centered on ways to neutralize the POW/MIA question as a barrier to normalization of relations with the United States, Khai said.

"We never agreed on what to advise our superiors. But everyone knew one of the problems was how to deal with the question of American POWs kept after 1973. The defense ministry had all the information (on POWs) and did not share it with us."

"We assumed that some of the Americans had died since 1973. Informally, it was suggested that some had been released in Europe and that others could be transferred, somewhere else, maybe to Laos," Khai said.

Khai said that he and others in the foreign ministry's research institute interpreted references to POWs "released in Europe" as a euphemism for American prisoners transferred to the Soviet Union and other Communist countries in Eastern Europe during the 1970s.

He also said it was assumed that some American POWs held in Vietnam and Laos after 1973 might have been executed in subsequent years.

Bargaining leverage

Khai's account of American servicemen held after the Vietnam War ended reportedly was confirmed privately last year by Nguyen Can, Vietnam's deputy ambassador to the United Nations.

Robert Egan, a New Jersey businessman with close ties to members of Vietnam's U.N. mission, said that Can admitted to him on several occasions that not all POWs had been released.

"Can told me the (North) Vietnamese were so suspicious of American intentions at the end of the war that they had to keep men (POWs) as bargaining leverage. He also said Viet Cong (Communist guerrillas in South Vietnam) and the Laotians ... also kept American POWs," Egan said.

Can told of one incident in 1979 when a small number of American POWs were moved to Hanoi from a camp near the Vietnam-China border after Chinese troops invaded Vietnam, according to Egan.

Egan said Can also told him the Americans were later moved to a Vietnamese-controlled area in neighboring Laos. The Vietnamese government feared that the presence of American POWs in Vietnam might be discovered, Egan said he was told by Can. Moving POWs to Laos, whose Communist government is effectively a client of Hanoi, would presumably permit the Vietnamese to deny responsibility if the prisoners were discovered.

Can has since returned to Vietnam. Attempts to reach the press attache for Vietnam's U.N. mission were unsuccessful.

Khai also charged that Hanoi withheld the remains of deceased American POWs during the 1970s and 1980s. The remains, and information about the missing men, was to be used as political leverage in negotiations with Washington, according to Khai.

"It was well known that many remains, about 300 or 400, were kept as bargaining chips for normalization of relations. We also discussed this policy at the foreign ministry," Khai said.

Khai's revelation of stored remains would seem to confirm earlier reports. A Vietnamese refugee who had worked as a mortician in North Vietnam told a congressional committee a decade ago that he had treated the remains of about 350 American servicemen. The mortician said the remains had been stored in a warehouse in Hanoi as recently as 1980. Vietnamese officials denied the report.

However, the Vietnamese government has returned the remains of about 200 deceased American servicemen over the past dozen years.

Mark Winkler, a New Jersey lawyer representing Khai, said his formal petition for political asylum will be filed this week with the Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS). An INS spokesman said the agency would have no comment on Khai until it receives his formal application.

Khai is presently on leave from the foreign ministry and is studying for a graduate degree at Columbia University. He said he made his decision to defect in late August and contacted the FBI in early September to request political asylum.

FBI spokesmen in New York and Washington declined comment on the Khai case.

Khai said he received a veiled death threat from a representative of Vietnam's U.N. mission after his decision to defect became known.

"They telephoned me to say it was death to do this. They didn't say if it was physical death or political death," Khai said.

[REDACTED] was watchful for any signs of American POWs during this time. He found a piece of olive drab strap about one inch wide on the roof of one of the huts in the compound. The only marking was an anchor. At times [REDACTED] heard someone whistling "Beatles" music but could not attribute this to an American. Result of examination:

All markings, notations and items of information contained in this document are classified ~~SECRET~~ unless otherwise noted.

A definite conclusion could not be reached due to the limited comparable handwriting samples and the length of time between the writing of those specimens.

From an examination of the Q4 specimen it could not be determined whether the handwriting and hand printing on that item were or were not written by one person.

A comparison of the Q4 hand printing with the limited hand printing on the K3 item determined that it (the Q4 hand printing) may have been prepared by someone other than JACOB E. MERCER.

EO 12812-2 b7C

While a definite conclusion could not be reached when comparing the Q4 handwriting with the K3 and K4 handwriting, nothing of significance was noted.

In order to effect a positive identification based upon a comparison of the previously submitted Q1 through Q3 photographs and the K1 and K2 photographs, significant individual identifying characteristics must be present and discernible. In this particular matter, however, should such characteristics exist, they are not visible in the photographs submitted to date.

Q1 through Q4 and K1 through K4 are returned herewith.

Specimens received: September 6, 1991

Specimens:

- Q4 One 35mm color copy negative of unidentified subject
purported to be [REDACTED]
- Q5 One 35mm color copy negative of unidentified subject
purported to be [REDACTED]
- K4 One strip of 35mm copy black and white negatives of subject [REDACTED]

Result of examination:

Due to the limited resolution in the questioned copy photographs purported to be [REDACTED] which have been submitted to date, and the limited resolution in the K4 photographs, a definite determination was not reached as to whether the questioned individual depicted in Q3, previously submitted, Q4 or Q5 is or is not [REDACTED] K4. As previously stated, although some class characteristics were noted which suggest the individual in the questioned photographs may be [REDACTED] sufficient individual identifying characteristics were not present that would make a positive determination possible.

In the previous Laboratory report dated August 19, 1991, it was requested that the original photograph of Q3 through Q5 and the original negatives or first generation prints of known photographs of [REDACTED] be submitted for further examination. Q4, Q5 and K4 are copies of various generations of these photographs, and therefore, have lost considerable detail which may be significant in conducting this type of examination. If further examination is requested in this matter, the original materials should be forwarded with this request.

The submitted evidence will be personally returned to the contributor.

Alleged fingerprints and palm prints of Larry J. Stevens and John L. Robertson

This report confirms and supplements information furnished telephonically on June 11, 1991.

There is no characteristic ridge detail present on the copy of infant prints of Larry J. Stevens.

Due to illegible comparable areas of the alleged prints of Stevens and Robertson it could not be determined if these prints were made by the same individual.

The alleged fingerprints of Robertson of the right hand on Exhibits B1, B2, B6 and B7 are identical. Fingerprints of the left hand on Exhibits A, B6 and C are identical.

Result of examination:

All markings, notations and items of information contained in this document are classified SECRET unless otherwise noted.

Metallurgical evaluation of the Q2 dog tag revealed it to be comprised of a Monel, most likely Monel 400, an alloy of primarily nickel and copper. During nondestructive X-ray fluorescence examinations, the Q2 alloy compared favorably with a reference standard Monel 400 of composition 64% nickel, 32% copper, 1.8% iron, and 1% manganese. The nondestructive examinations conducted revealed no superficial characteristic of exposure to elevated temperatures. This suggests either that the dog tag was not subjected to the elevated temperatures of a JP-4 fueled fire or if it was, that the characteristics normally acquired as a result of such exposure have been subsequently removed by cleaning or dissipated as a result of severe handling/use. However, it is emphasized that the surface examinations conducted were nondestructive in nature, the results of which are not positive indications that the tag was not subjected to elevated temperatures. Such a confirmation could only be made as a result of microstructural metallographic examinations, a somewhat destructive technique which requires cutting a sample from the tag.

It is noted that the material of which Q2 is comprised has not been encountered as a result of metallurgical examinations of numerous dog tags previously submitted in similar matters. All previous tags have been comprised of austenitic stainless steel rather than Monel. No statement can be made by the FBI Laboratory as to the authenticity of the Q2 dog tag, or of the previously submitted tags, based on the alloy utilized, inasmuch as no specifications or reference tags contemporaneously fabricated have ever been submitted. However, it is additionally noted that it is probable that more than one government contract was awarded for fabrication of military dog tags. If an alternate material was authorized for use in dog tags, Monel would have been one of the prime candidates for substitution if material selection was based only or primarily on ductility and corrosion resistance.

The metallurgical examinations of the fracture surfaces and other damage exhibited by the Q2 dog tag revealed characteristics of repetitive forced contact, post-fracture flow, and possible reversed bending. The post-fracture flow and possible reversed bending appears to have occurred relatively 'recently' as compared to the apparent age of the tag. In other words, the Q2 dog tag acquired characteristics of age (either naturally or artificially) and was subjected at a later date(s) to forces which damaged pre-existing fracture surfaces. The damage exhibited, in total, is not consistent with having been caused by a single event but rather is the cumulative result of different stress (force) systems separated significantly in time.

A short dark brown animal hair was found on the ALSO SUBMITTED plastic. This hair is not suitable for significant comparison purposes. A short black head hair fragment exhibiting Mongoloid characteristics was also found on the ALSO SUBMITTED plastic. While the proximal end of this fragment exhibits evidence of crushing, there is no evidence the hair has been burned.

No blood was found on specimens Q1, Q2 or the ALSO SUBMITTED.

As previously indicated, metallurgical examinations to more positively characterize thermal exposure history of the Q2 dog tag were not conducted inasmuch as they require relatively destructive techniques. If such examinations are deemed appropriate, the items should be resubmitted with a request for the examinations. If discussion regarding the techniques are desired, contact should be effected with the FBI Laboratory via secure telephone lines or in person.

Latent fingerprint examinations of the Q1 map were not conducted inasmuch as they also may involve relatively destructive techniques. Inquiries regarding such examinations may be made over unsecure telephone lines or, if the examinations are desired, the Q1 map should be resubmitted with the appropriate request.

Mineralogical, chemistry and document examinations are continuing and you will be apprised of the results by separate communication.

It could not be determined whether JON THOMAS BUSCH, Kc2 writer, or VICTOR JOE APODACA, JR., Kc3 writer, did or did not prepare the hand printing appearing upon specimen Q1 due to the limited nature of the questioned hand printing and the lack of unique characteristics.

The troughs and edges of the characters and the rim on the Q2 dog tag contain a "film" of soil. The soil is present on both sides of the dog tag and is similar in color and composition. This is consistent with both sides of the dog tag having, at one time, been simultaneously exposed to the same source of soil, i.e., having been buried or used as a digging instrument.

Chemistry examinations to characterize the ink(s) and stain(s) on the Q1 map are continuing and you will be separately advised as to the results of those examinations.

It is noted that when the ALSO SUBMITTED pieces of damaged plastic were unfolded for examination, it was determined that there are two pieces rather than the three listed on the incoming inventory.

The Q1 map and the ALSO SUBMITTED items have been protected and preserved utilizing a special encapsulation technique for possible fingerprint examinations should they be desired at a later date.

Document - Hairs and Fibers - Chemical Analysis

Result of examination:

This report supplements FBI Laboratory reports dated April 3, 1989 and April 7, 1989, and completes the examinations requested. For a complete specimen listing, refer to the FBI Laboratory report dated April 7, 1989, in captioned matter.

The blue, green and black inked markings on the Q1 map are not suitable for ink dating. Accordingly, no conclusion could be drawn as to the age of these inks.

The areas surrounding the holes on the Q1 map were examined for acidic and basic (alkaline) residues, but none were found.

The submitted specimens are being retained in the FBI Laboratory until called for by a representative of your agency.

Honorable Robert C. Smith
United States Senate
Washington, D. C.

Dear Senator Smith:

As a courtesy to you, I asked the Special Photographic Unit of the FBI Laboratory to conduct an initial examination of the photographs you submitted. The examination determined that a comparison for identification purposes cannot be made with the photographs you provided. This determination is based on the lack of sufficient distinguishing features in the unknown subject's photographs.

I regret that we are unable to respond in a more conclusive manner. You will find enclosed with this letter the photographs you forwarded.

Sincerely yours,

John E. Collingwood

RE: HAVANA RADIO BROADCAST OF INDIVIDUAL IDENTIFIED AS COMMANDER THOMPSON (phonetic),
UNITED STATES NAVY,
MARCH 22-23, 1967
INTERNAL SECURITY - CUBA

On March 22, 1967, MM T-1, an individual acquainted with certain phases of both pro and anti-FIDEL CASTRO activities in Cuba and the United States, advised that at 6:45 P.M. March 22, 1967, Havana radio station CMQ broadcast an announcement that a prisoner of North Vietnam would speak over that station that evening. MM T-1 related an individual identified as Commander THOMPSON (phonetic) of the United States Navy was described as a pilot who had been taken prisoner after his plane had been shot down over North Vietnam.

This broadcast, with Commander THOMPSON speaking in English, was translated into the Spanish language. Commander THOMPSON stated he was very sorry to have had to drop the bombs but he had no alternative. He was following instructions given to him by a lieutenant of the United States Naval Intelligence, not further identified. Commander THOMPSON stated he has seen the effects of the bombings, with the people and houses being burned, etc. MM T-1 advised this news broadcast was valuable propaganda by the Communists against the United States and in favor of North Vietnam.

On March 23, 1967, MM T-1 stated Radio Havana, Cuba, in a short-wave broadcast at 10:00 P.M. on March 22, 1967, repeated the same broadcast of Commander THOMPSON. On March 23, 1967, Radio Progreso, Havana, Cuba, made the same broadcast. MM T-1 explained Radio Progreso is one of the strongest and most powerful long-wave radio stations in the Western Hemisphere and is reached by the peoples in southern portions of the United States, the entire Caribbean area and north and central portions of South America.

CAPTURED U.S. OFFICER-TELLS OF DRV BOMBING

Moscow RED STAR 10 March 1967--A (FOR OFFICIAL USE ONLY)

(TASS correspondent E. Kovelev dispatch from Hanoi: "The Confession of an Air Pirate".)

no

(Text) For one and a half hours the International Press Club in Hanoi heard a statement in English with the rolling "R" peculiar to Americans. The taped voice declared in a muffled tone: "On 2 December 1966 our air force brigade participated in a raid on the suburbs of Hanoi The brigade commander, Phillips, told us that this raid was of exceptional importance, since it would make the people of Hanoi understand that they will not escape the horrors of war. In a broader sense, the raid was to demonstrate to the whole world what we can do and to test the reaction."

This confession belongs to a lieutenant commander of the U.S. Navy, Pilot Richard Stratton, from the aircraft carrier Ticonderoga, shot down over the DRV on 5 January this year. Beginning on 14 November 1966, when the aircraft carrier took up position on Tonkin Gulf, Stratton continuously participated in raids against North Vietnamese towns and villages, including two raids against Hanoi and its suburbs.

Stratton continued: "I participated in the raid on Hanoi on 2 December 1966. The target was the southern area of Hanoi--a territory which stretches for 10 miles to the south from the center of the city. The aircraft were loaded so as to inflict maximum damage upon the people. For this purpose the busiest part of the day was selected.

"The aircraft met strong antiaircraft and rocket fire. Phillips led the first group of aircraft; the second group of aircraft, of the A-4 type, was headed by Commander Hill. While I led the third group of A-4 planes. Because of strong defensive fire from the ground, the groups could not operate as a whole and launched individual attacks. I shuddered when I saw a densely populated area under the wings of the aircraft.

"On 14 December 1966 our brigade was ordered to repeatedly strike Hanoi. Phillips again stressed the importance of the operation, since Washington was directly interested in it.

"In this raid we had no specially planned targets. The entire area represented a target for the strike. After the return, the raid was considered successful. But only a week later we realized what the brigade commander had meant by the term 'successful.'

"The aviators were stunned when they learned from various statements made in the name of State Department representatives and even in the name of President Johnson himself that the strike had been directed only against military targets. We, ourselves, had participated in these raids and we know that the strikes were against populated areas and not against military targets. We know that we bombed Hanoi specifically. Therefore, the statements of the U.S. Government were obviously false."

On 6 March U.S. Navy Lt. Comdr. Richard Stratton was presented to journalists at a press conference arranged by the committee for investigating the crimes of American imperialists in Vietnam. This by-no-means-unimportant accomplice of the crimes presented a sorry picture.

AMERICAN SERVICEMEN PRISONERS OF WAR (POW)
OR MISSING IN ACTION (MIA) IN INDOCHINA

[REDACTED] was interviewed by a Special Agent of the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) and furnished the following information:

[REDACTED] learned of the location of the remains of six (6) American servicemen killed during the Vietnam war.

[REDACTED] found the wreckage
of an American helicopter which contained the body of the pilot.
[REDACTED] later sold the remains to [REDACTED] who buried the body. The dog tags taken from the body show the identity of the pilot as " ROBERT E. WILLIAMS, U.S. 54666154, O POS, CH. OF CHRIST."

[REDACTED] found the wreckage
of an American helicopter which contained the body of the pilot who had been shot in the head. This body was also buried. The dog tags taken from this body show the identity of the pilot as "
JAMES G. RNOED, RA 1398877, B, Roman Catholic."

Sometime during the war four (4) U.S. soldiers went to a party in the city of NHA TRANG where Vietnamese prostitutes were in attendance. The prostitutes were actually working for the North Vietnamese Government and the soldiers were shot and killed during the party. The bodies are buried between two (2) houses in NHA TRANG and the area is presently covered by concrete. This information came to light after the prostitutes began bragging about the killing of the soldiers. These soldiers are identified as follows:

[REDACTED] was given one piece of bone each from the two (2) helicopter pilots, as well as the tracing of the ROBERT E. WILLIAMS dog tag, all of which he turned over to [REDACTED]

[REDACTED] in hopes of proving the existence of the remains.

The only way that the American government can take possession of these remains is through him because the Vietnamese citizens who have possession of the remains or who know their location fear reprisals from the current Vietnamese government if they contact the American government directly or if the government learns that they have information regarding American remains.

[REDACTED] from a one page document (front and back) of handwritten notes in the Vietnamese language to the FBI. These are his notes concerning the information in his possession about the American remains as described above. A copy of this document is being made a part of this Letterhead Memorandum.
